GOING ABROAD

Nancy Wynne Talks of Helen Shelton's Wedding to Wayne Vetterlein on Saturday—Miss Sergeant Returns From European Trip

MY GOODNESS! but the tongues did wag on Saturday and yesterday when Helen Shelton and Wayne Vetterlein decided to marry, and just calmly went on and did. They were in City Hall and were married by Magistrate O'Brien at 12:30 o'clock. Quite a lot of their friends were present, I hear, but the only ones I know were the bride and groom. The witnesses were Eugene de Roussé, Joe Dexter and Aleck Coles. They had luncheon in a party after the ceremony and then departed for Atlantic City on their wedding trip. A wire from the family from there, says Wayne Vetterlein, you remember, was one of the first war heroes. He and Price McQuillen came home together. I happened to be on at the Pennsylvania game at Franklin field one afternoon when they were able to go about after their return, and shall never forget how the grandstand rose up with the cheering and the waving of flags before our entry into the war, and were severely injured, each of them losing a leg.

Helen Shelton is a daughter of the Frederick H. Shelton, of 228 South Twenty-first street. She came out about three years ago, and last year decided to go in for a career of her own, and has been holding down a job as stenographer in an office for some time.

Now that we are having a respite from the very cold weather, many people are appearing in bright-colored suits, which look attractive these dull days, when every one is getting tired of their winter clothes.

I saw Mrs. Paul Howe the other day in a pretty lavender tweed suit with a creed hat of the same material. The hat was one of those which turn up all around, and on the right side it had a black pompadour which was especially attractive. Polly Bayard I saw wearing a blue tweed suit and a blue tweed hat to match. With it she wore a small necklace of Japanese minks and gray silk and wool stockings with black heels, and brown shoes, and the whole get up was most becoming.

EVERY ONE is glad to hear that Alva Sergeant is home again. Alva and her mother, Mrs. George Sergeant, have been in Europe for seven months. They went over in July and have been traveling around to various places of interest since. They missed Alva and her mother at the Christmas Ball in December and at the "Marriage Tax" a couple of weeks ago, though I must say those who always danced with Alva "did themselves proud." But I hear here for "The What Nots and Why Nots," and "I'll wager she'll dance more beautifully than ever.

Alva is so good-looking and always dresses so well. She is very fair, you know, and slender and willowy, so that she really dances like a fairy. I'm sure she has gotten some lovely clothes on the other side.

IT'S interesting to hear that Mrs. Walter Schuyler Volkmar, of Grey-street Lodge, Chestnut Hill, had her beautiful dog Greystock, Hugh Wynne exhibition on the American Dog Club show at Pinehurst last week. He took two first prizes and two third prizes for the best American-bred shepherd dog. Mrs. Volkmar was naturally much delighted with the success of her daughter, Mrs. George C. Thomas.

Mrs. Volkmar's son, George C. Thomas Remington (you know, Mrs. Remington's first husband was Mr. Remington), and his wife are living in Colorado, Calif., where Mr. Remington is in the real estate business. Mrs. Volkmar spends a great deal of time going to California, and goes very frequently to California and has a house in Colorado herself. Her brother, George C. Thomas, and his family have been living for two or three years out in Beverly Hills, Calif.

TO GO back to the subject of dogs, Jackie came home with a funny-looking little puppy that had followed the pup and the street. Mother objected to the pup and the street, but the pup, alley dog, Jackie, I don't want you to keep him." But said Jackie: "Mum, just look at his eyes, they're so full of love; don't you think you could keep him?"

DREAMLAND ADVENTURES

Judge Owl—Weatherman By DADDY

(In this adventure Jack and Janet learn strange secrets of the Weather Man, and help the birds coming home from the Southland.)

CHAPTER I Spring Wishes

"I WISH spring would come back to the woods," sighed Jack. "I am tired of the long, long winter."

"Yes, I wish spring would come and bring the warbling birds and pretty flowers and warm weather."

Perky Squirrel pecked around the trunk of a tree which hid his body and busy tail.

"Eh! Eh! If you want warm weather, why don't you go and tell the Weatherman?" he chattered.

"Who is the Weatherman?" asked Jack.

"Judge Owl is the Weatherman," replied Perky Squirrel.

"And where shall we find him?" asked Janet.

"You will find Judge Owl in a hollow tree in the darkest thicket of the big woods," chattered Perky Squirrel.

"Will you promise you the kind of weather you want?"

Saying this, Perky Squirrel frisked away among the branches of the trees, and, though Jack and Janet called after him, he would not wait to answer any more questions.

"Let's go and find the Weatherman," said Janet. "Maybe he will make spring come right away."

"Yes," said Jack. "I think I know where to look for him. The darkest thicket in the woods is in a deep valley not far from where Hoppy-Hop Rabbit has his burrow."

So Jack and Janet mounted their ponies, Topsy and Topy, and set off for the deep valley. They took a short cut over the hills and were not long in getting there.

They met Junco Snowbird busily scratching the dead leaves under a pine tree, looking for food.

"Hello, Junco Snowbird," said Jack politely. "Can you tell us where Judge Owl, the Weatherman, lives?"

"Yes, I can tell you where Judge Owl, the Weatherman, lives," replied Junco Snowbird. "And when you get there I wish you would tell him I am tired of winter and want spring to come right away."

"That is just what we intend to tell him," said Janet. "Please tell us the very shortest way to where Judge Owl lives."

"Well," said Junco Snowbird, "follow your noses for a couple of hops, then turn to the right and then to the left and then to the right and then to the left and then to the right, and if you don't get mixed up you will come at last to Judge Owl's weather-office."

Jack and Janet were mixed up by all the turns Junco Snowbird's rights and lefts, but when they asked him for plainer directions, he just said "Right, left, right, left," as fast as he could and flew away.

So Jack and Janet went ahead for a couple of bird hops, and the second brought them to a dark thicket where the trees grew so close they had to leave the ponies and go ahead on foot. They turned to the right to get around a tree, and then had to turn to the left, as their way was blocked by a second tree. Indeed, there were so many trees that they kept turning and twisting all the time, first to the right, then to the left, then to the right, and back again to the left. Soon they lost track of all the turns and went on blindly, just hoping they would find the way to Judge Owl's office.

And that proved to be just the very best way to find Judge Owl's tree, for after a dozen turns and twists, they came to an old hollow tree.

"This must be the place," said Jack. He and Janet looked up, and sure enough they saw a sign on the tree—a sign made of neat round holes that spelled words.

"JUDGE OWL—WEATHERMAN" That is what the sign said.

George Allen, Inc. 1214—Chestnut Street—1214
